

Fairness and Sharing:

Do you think Duncan was being fair to all of his crayons? Why or why not?

How can we make sure everyone feels included and treated equally, like the crayons wanted?

Feelings and Empathy:

Why do you think some crayons felt sad, angry, or tired?

Have you ever felt like one of the crayons in the story? What happened, and how did you feel better?

Rights and Responsibilities:

Do you think the crayons have the right to ask for changes in how they are used? Why?

If you were Duncan, what could you do to make the crayons happy again?

Different Perspectives:

Is it okay for each crayon to have different feelings and needs? Why do you think that?

Which crayon do you think had the most reasonable complaint?

Creative Problem-Solving:

What could Duncan do to make sure all the crayons are used fairly in the future?

How would you feel if you were a crayon that was never used or always used too much?