

Should we wear uniform?

Some schools expect children to wear uniforms, but not everyone agrees this is the best choice. People have different views about whether it helps or causes problems.

Those in favour of school uniforms often say they make life easier. Everyone wearing the same clothes means fewer distractions and less pressure to wear expensive items. On school trips, teachers can easily spot their class, which helps with safety.

Still, there are concerns. Some children enjoy choosing what to wear and feel more confident when they can dress in a way that suits them. Uniforms can also be expensive, especially when schools require more than one set for different activities or seasons.

While there are strong reasons to support school uniforms, I believe the best approach is to involve children in the decision. If they help choose the style or colours, they may feel more confident and prouder of what they wear.
