

The Real Story of The Three Little Pigs – The Wolf Olympics!

Character

Introduce the wolf – Mr A Wolf (ambitious, sporty and misunderstood)

Introduce The Three Little Pigs – Hamlet, Oinks & Chopsy – mischievous

WAGOLL:

Hiding in the shadows, Mr. A. Wolf—an ambitious, sporty, and deeply misunderstood creature dreamed of winning gold at the ‘Wolf Olympics’. Constantly judged by his sharp teeth and keen instincts, he longed to prove that not all wolves were villains. Meanwhile, Hamlet, Oinks, and Chopsy—three mischievous, playful, and rather cheeky little pigs—snorted with laughter as they plotted their latest pranks. Teasing, tricking, and tumbling through the fields, they had a knack for causing trouble. Little did they know, their fun was about to take an unexpected turn...

Build Up

Wolf plans his training for Wolf Olympics - long jump, high jump and the huff and puff test.

WAGOLL:

Determined to succeed, Mr. A. Wolf laced up his running shoes and stretched his powerful legs. This year’s Wolf Olympics was just around the corner, and he was aiming for gold. Leaping, sprinting, and breathing deeply, he prepared for his three main events: the Long Jump, the High Jump, and, of course, the ultimate test of wolf endurance—the Huff and Puff Test.

With focused determination, he practiced his mighty breath, sending leaves swirling and grass bending in waves. "Just a little more power," he muttered, unaware that his training would soon lead him straight to the homes of three mischievous little pigs...

Problem:

First straw house and long jump - crashes, house falls. Second the huff and puff test - stick house falls down. Third, the high jump - wolf is injured and pigs roll around laughing but then decide to help.

WAGOLL:

Leaping with confidence, Mr. A. Wolf soared through the air, his muscles tensed as he aimed for his personal best in the Long Jump. But—CRASH! Instead of landing gracefully, he plowed straight into a flimsy straw house. Poof! The house collapsed in a whirlwind of hay, leaving Hamlet squealing as he scurried away.

Shaking off the dust, the determined wolf moved on to his next event: the Huff and Puff Test. Inhaling deeply, he filled his powerful lungs and blew with all his might. The rickety stick house wobbled, creaked, and then—WHOOSH!—it tumbled to the ground, sending Oinks running for cover.

Finally, Mr. A. Wolf prepared for his greatest challenge: the High Jump. With a mighty push, he launched himself toward the sky—higher, higher... too high! His landing? A complete disaster. THUD! He crashed to the ground, groaning in pain. Chopsy and his brothers, who had been rolling with laughter but suddenly stopped as they saw the wolf was crying.

Resolution

Pigs helped wolf to hospital. Wolf explained his dreams and The Three Little Pigs vowed to help him.

WAGOLL:

Seeing Mr. A. Wolf groaning on the ground, the three little pigs stopped laughing. Chopsy, Oinks, and Hamlet exchanged guilty glances. Rushing, lifting, and pushing, the pigs carefully helped the injured wolf to the nearest animal hospital. As the doctors patched him up, Mr. Wolf sighed. “I wasn’t trying to chase you,” he explained. “I was training for the Wolf Olympics. I dream of winning gold—Long Jump, High Jump, and the Huff and Puff Test.” The pigs blinked in surprise. “You mean... you weren’t trying to eat us?” Hamlet asked.

Mr. Wolf chuckled, wincing as he held his bandaged leg. “Of course not! I just have really bad luck.”

Determined, inspired, and maybe a little guilty, the three little pigs made a decision. “Then we’ll help you train!” Chopsy declared.

Ending:

Help to re-build 3 brick houses for the pig. The pigs become wolf's trainer and wolf wins 1 gold and 2 bronze medals.

WAGOLL:

With their new friendship sealed, Mr. A. Wolf and the three little pigs set out on a mission. Lifting, stacking, and sweating, they worked together to rebuild not just one, but three sturdy brick houses—one for each pig. Mixing cement, laying bricks, and painting doors, the unlikely team proved that teamwork was stronger than any huff and puff.

But the pigs weren't done yet. "Now it's our turn to help you," Hamlet grinned. Oinks designed a special training plan, Chopsy built hurdles and weights, and Hamlet—well, he mostly cheered from the sidelines. Jumping, sprinting, and practicing his breath control, Mr. Wolf trained harder than ever before.

Finally, the Wolf Olympics arrived. The crowd roared as Mr. A. Wolf took his place. Leaping, soaring, and blowing with precision, he gave it his all. By the end of the competition, he stood proudly on the podium with one gold medal and two bronze medals!

As the pigs cheered, Mr. Wolf beamed. He hadn't just won medals—he had gained three unexpected best friends. And from that day on, wolves and pigs proved that sometimes, the best stories come from second chances.